

Commenting on St. Paul's experience, Chiara Lubich suggested: "[...] the choices we Christians have to make are the direct opposite of what people usually choose to do. In this we truly go against the current. In the world, people give great importance to success, power and prestige....

St. Paul says just the opposite! He says we should boast of our weakness! (...) And so let's trust in God. He will make good use of our weakness, our emptiness. And when he does something, we can be sure it will be something great, that will spread lasting goodness and meet the real needs of individuals and society."

Chiara Lubich, Word of Life commentary, July 1982

wordteens.focolare.org 4 centro.rpu@focolare.org

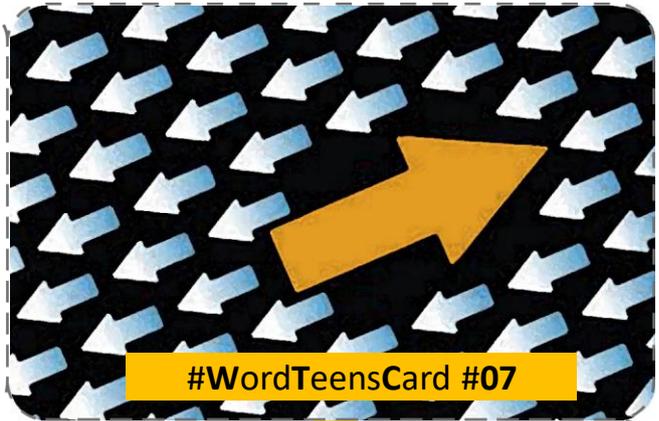

4
3

Did you ever read the Magnificat? Lk 1:46-55

It's the paradox of the Gospel that says, «Blessed are the meek because they will inherit the earth.» In the Magnificat, Mary rejoices in the power of the Lord, who lives and in the history of humanity, whenever he finds someone who trusts him completely because they are little and weak.

How can we find strength when we are weak?

2

The experience of the apostle Paul opens a whole new horizon before us. By recognizing and accepting our weakness, we can abandon ourselves totally into the embrace of our Father, who loves us just as we are and wants to help us along our journey.

«My grace is sufficient for you, for power is made perfect in weakness» (2 Cor 12:9)

Cut and fold, and you will have a small card that you can keep with you for the whole month.

Commenting on St. Paul's experience, Chiara Lubich suggested: "[...] the choices we Christians have to make are the direct opposite of what people usually choose to do. In this we truly go against the current. In the world, people give great importance to success, power and prestige....

St. Paul says just the opposite! He says we should boast of our weakness! (...) And so let's trust in God. He will make good use of our weakness, our emptiness. And when he does something, we can be sure it will be something great, that will spread lasting goodness and meet the real needs of individuals and society."

Chiara Lubich, Word of Life commentary, July 1982

wordteens.focolare.org 4 centro.rpu@focolare.org

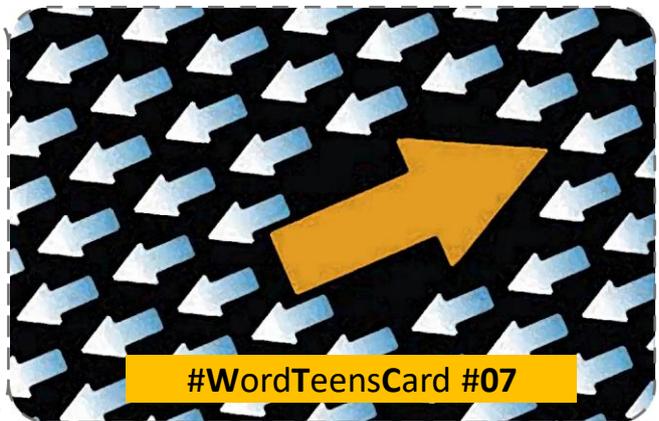

4
3

Did you ever read the Magnificat? Lk 1:46-55

It's the paradox of the Gospel that says, «Blessed are the meek because they will inherit the earth.» In the Magnificat, Mary rejoices in the power of the Lord, who lives and in the history of humanity, whenever he finds someone who trusts him completely because they are little and weak.

How can we find strength when we are weak?

2

The experience of the apostle Paul opens a whole new horizon before us. By recognizing and accepting our weakness, we can abandon ourselves totally into the embrace of our Father, who loves us just as we are and wants to help us along our journey.

«My grace is sufficient for you, for power is made perfect in weakness» (2 Cor 12:9)

